

January 6, 2011

Town Talk

Red Lobster is unveiling a new restaurant design in Denver that offers guests a refreshing seaside dining experience, inspired by the coastal village of Bar Harbor, Maine.

Ten Denver-area restaurants have been remodeled or newly constructed in the Bar Harbor style, including those in Denver, Longmont, Greeley, Aurora, Littleton, Wheat Ridge and Lakewood.

You may have noticed some of the exciting changes they've made on the outside, including stone towers, flags snapping in the breeze and Adirondack benches that invite mingling and conversation.

And the changes don't stop there. Red Lobster recently debuted new lunch and dinner menu items, inspired by the flavors and regional tastes of America.

All new dishes are under $20, so Denver-area guests can experience fresh, delicious seafood at a good value.

To learn more about Red Lobster's restaurant design, find locations and check out their menu, visit redlobster.com.